

April 23, 2008

Ses Petites Mains

I am on an ongoing quest to find unique children's clothing. My daughter would be happy to wear Abercrombie if I let her, but as long as I am paying for her wardrobe, that will not happen. Basics from Gap and J. Crew are staples of my kids' wardrobes, and I like to sprinkle some different designs into their closets. While researching kids shops in Paris, I came upon a beautiful design house, based here in San Francisco.

Ses Petites Mains is the brainchild of San Franciscan, Beth Miles. Her line celebrates childhood with timeless classics. "I love the idea of all fabrics being able to be worn together, as children love to throw anything on." The dresses can be worn with pants, slips, and mixed with tunics and bermudas. The designs are delicate, and whimsical at the same time. Ses Petites Mains can be found in fine boutiques throughout the Bay Area.

Posted by pamelahornik at 04:32 AM in Basics, Children, Clothing, International, Pamela, San Francisco | Permalink

Technorati Tags: Ses Petites Mains, SFBayStyle

<http://sfbaystyle.typepad.com/blog/2008/04/ses-petites-mai.html>